Remya Unnithan

Frederick R&B singer to perform at Masquerade Ball

By LAUREN LAROCCA

News-Post Staff

llarocca@fredericknewspost.com

"I've been singing since I was two years old," Remya Unnithan said recently.

The lifelong Frederick resident and 2007 graduate of Tuscarora High School said by age 14 she took her music seriously and began writing her own material and performing in the area.

She sang at an Indian festival in Frederick about five years ago and said she has performed the National Anthem several times, including during a campaign against domestic violence at Montgomery College.

She began recording in Southern India in 2007 because studio costs are less expensive and her family has a vacation home there, where Unnithan visits every few years. She said she has about six completed songs and a CD is in the making, tentatively titled "The Chronicles of Remya." She recorded a demo CD in India of cover songs. "I write about real-life situations," she said. She tries to stay true to that. "The lyrics I have up (on MySpace) I think are inspirational. I don't let anyone hear an unfinished product." Her style is a cross between R&B and pop, and she usually gets beats from local musicians, like the hip hop group Razor Eaters, who went by the name Center of Attention when she worked with them.

"I'm usually looking for a powerful R&B beat, usually something slow. I'm working my way up to the faster songs," she said, laughing.

Unnithan is currently a fulltime, second-year student at Frederick Community College, aiming to major in psychology and work with kids — teaching or social work — if her music career doesn't work out.

"My first CD ever was probably the Spice Girls," she said, laughing. "The first CD I started singing to was Celine Dion. ... Friends probably knew me as the girl who sings Celine Dion."

Her influences these days range from Brandi to Beyonce to Ella Fitzgerald and, still, Celine Dion. During the Masquerade Ball, she will perform "Halo," by Beyonce. The song "sounds like it's about a boyfriend and girlfriend," Unnithan said, "but I don't see it that way. I see it as being about having that person who's always looking down on you ... when you're feeling down and weak."

Simplicity is key for Vietnamese painter

By LAUREN LAROCCA

When studying Chinese painting under Master Mu Jiashan, Nguyen This Viet Hang was told to stand up and move her body — even dance — before starting a piece. The movements freed her up to create a series of delicate Chinese paintings, now on exhibit at the Urbana Regional Library. “You can’t be so rigid,” Nguyen said. The artist immigrated from Vietnam to the U.S. in 1974 and began painting about four years ago. In addition to traditional Chinese paintings, she creates impressionistic oil pieces, which are also on display in her current exhibit. “I’m fairly new at this,” she said. “I’m still at the stage where I’m trying to find myself.”

Still, she has enjoyed drawing for as long as she can remember.

“If there’s a piece of paper and a pen lying around, I always draw something,” she said. “Painting and music is not something my parents encouraged. My father always said, if you want to become a painter, I would have to continue to feed you.”

Nguyen divides her time between New Market and Germantown with her husband and works part-time as an accounting assistant.

After her two daughters were grown, Nguyen borrowed some how-to books on Chinese painting from the library, and she began studying under Master Mu Jiashan at Montgomery College in Rockville, where she continues to take weekly classes. She also participates in a Montgomery County plein air group that meets weekly when the weather is warm enough to paint outside.

Chinese brush painting and oil painting require different approaches, Nguyen said.

“Acrylic — if you don’t like it, you can just scrape it off,” she explained. “Acrylic is very forgiving. But with Chinese painting, you have to be very careful with controlling the brush and very careful with the ink. ... You can easily ruin a whole piece of paper.”

She uses at least three wells of black ink that have been diluted to various shades of gray. Light strokes and heavy strokes, thick and thin, are all critical when added to the thin delicacy of rice paper, the traditional canvas for Chinese paintings.

“Learning how to control how much ink is an art in itself,” she said. “If you make it too wet, the moment you put it on the rice paper, it smears.”

Some of her pieces are as large as doors. Master Mu encourages painters to use large sheets of rice paper — which Nguyen has not been able to find in the area and has to order from China — to stimulate loose movement and broad strokes.

“I like its simplicity,” she said of the Chinese style. “You may need 10 brushstrokes, and then you have something. ... I don’t like detail work very much.”

Much of the subject matter — lotus flowers, Chrysanthemums, lily pads — reminds her of Vietnamese scenery.

“Master Mu always says you have to put your heart into it. You have to put your energy into it.”

Calligraphy, too, is an essential element of the pieces. The work is incomplete, she said, until you stamp your name. She had to learn how to write her name in Chinese. She uses a thick, red paste to stamp her name on each piece with a device called a chop.

She noted that she uses very little color in Chinese painting — light brown mountains, green leaves — each piece uses only what is necessary.

Nguyen has exhibited her work at the Unitarian Universalist Church in Rockville, the Yellow Barn Studio in Glen Echo and a now defunct art gallery in downtown New Market. She has also exhibited art through the Gaithersburg Art Association and the Montgomery County Agricultural Fair. She is a member of the Frederick Arts Council, the Gaithersburg Fine Arts Council and Friends of the Yellow Barn Studio.

Some of her work can be seen online at her website, www.paintingsbyhang.com

Chesapeake ousted from state tournament

Injury-riddled Skipjacks won't mount regional title defense with 10-17 record

HAGERSTOWN – Chesapeake College's 2008 postseason included seven games spread over three tournaments, including a Region XX men's basketball championship and an appearance in the state finals.

This year's postseason lasted 40 minutes.

Third-seeded Hagerstown Community College defeated the 14th-seeded Skipjacks, 95-81, Tuesday afternoon in the first round of the Maryland Junior College Athletic Conference state tournament. The Skipjacks – 0-8 against NJCAA Division I Region XX rivals this season and 10-17 overall – then opted against defending their title in next week's region tournament.

"The season was very disappointing," said Chesapeake head coach John Mappas. "Our guard play was very poor and injuries hurt us. This was the worst season for injuries in all the years I've coached at the college level."

Injuries began early, when the Skipjacks lost star guard Antoine White in the season opener, and continued to the end as premier forward William Cray was lost just after the Skipjacks put together a three-game winning streak that seemed to give them momentum for the playoffs. Chesapeake lost its final two games without Cray's inside presence each by double digits.

For all of that, the Skipjacks stayed close to host Hagerstown for much of Tuesday's playoff. The Hawks had a 47-41 halftime lead, which Chesapeake cut to 67-63 with about 12 minutes remaining.

"That was the pivotal time of the game," said Mappas. "Down four, we had five straight possessions where we didn't score. Then they went on a run and stretched the lead out to 20 points."

Mappas said guard play was the key to the game, with the Hawks' guards outscoring Chesapeake's backcourt, 71-24. Guards Amaurys Fermin (22 points), Raylin Brown (18), Jordan Brooks (15), and Jeremy Myers (10) all reached double figures for the Hawks.

Forward Raason Young added 16 points for Hagerstown. The Hawks (20-7) will play 11th-seeded Garrett College, a 66-64 winner over No. 6 Montgomery College/Rockville, in Friday's quarterfinals.

Isadore Melton led the Skipjacks with 20 points. Darnell Malabet (15 points), Carlton Brown (11), and Ricky Teagle (10) also reached double figures for Chesapeake.

A Life of Poetry
Fairfax Station's Yearn Hong Choi breaks ground in literary circles.

By Steve Hibbard
Thursday, March 05, 2009

For 14 years, Fairfax Station resident Yearn Hong Choi, 67, has been taking an hour and 20 minute walk from his home on Preakness Lane in Lee Chapel Grove to Burke Lake Park. Usually, he sits on a bench around the lake for 10 minutes, watching the water and the birds, and sometimes the fishermen, where he prays with the trees.

"It always inspires me," said the Korean-American poet who came to this country with $70 in his pocket. It was from those walks that he wrote the poem, "Winter Woods" (see sidebar), which is included in a collection of poetry published in "Moon of New York." He has written five books of poetry.

"He's the premiere Korean American poet in this country," said Ellen Olmstead, who teaches comparative literature at Montgomery College. "He's put together the first and definitive anthologies of Korean American poetry in the U.S. and wrote excellent introductions to those anthologies."

"He's someone whose work I'm very excited about because he's been a ground-breaker, and he's very knowledgeable about Korean poetic traditions and American poetic traditions," Olmstead. "I like that he has many different themes and many different styles and that's a reflection of his own background from Korea."

"I thought the book was very heartwarming," said Susan Cremins, who taught creative writing at Anne Arundel Community College for nine years. "I think he did an excellent job in trying to explain what life was like. He had a very positive outlook on everything, including death."

CHOI'S POEMS are confessions of a Korean-American life from 1968 when he moved to Indiana University as a student. In order to make a living, he pursued a Ph.D. in political science and public administration with a specialty in environmental policy. He taught in the college of business at the University of Wisconsin, Old Dominion University and UDC. He also worked at the Pentagon. He went back to Korea from 1999 through 2006 to care for his aging mother, where he taught at the University of Seoul, Korea. He is married to his wife Jane, a retired pharmacist, and they have two grown children, William and Joyce.

But Choi never lost the inner poet. In fact, when he was a young boy in Korea, his father dreamed that he would be a poet. So he spent years cultivating keen powers of observation and sensitivity to make that dream a reality.

CHOI IS founding president of the Korean American Poetry Group, organized in 2001, as well as the Korean American Literary Group, organized in 1990. He is the senior member of the Korean American Literary Society and edited the book "Surfacing Sadness — A Centennial of Korean-American Literature from 1903-2003," a first anthology of Korean-American literature, which is used by many colleges. "I picked up several poems from poets, essays and short stories from each writer," Choi said. He also edited three anthologies of Korean-American poetry: "Mother and Dove," "Fragrance of Poetry: Korean-American Literature" and "An Empty House: Korean-American Poetry."

Inspiration for Choi's poetry comes from his personal life and from being a political scientist. He writes about racial discrimination, the Virginia Tech tragedy and the war on terror as easily as writing about his grandmother when she harvested potatoes.

"The life of the poetry is based on metaphor, symbols and ideas and thought," Choi said. "And ultimately, poetry is supposed to provoke the people's minds and agitate the people's minds."

"Some sort of metaphor should be mobilized to make a poem," he says. "Yesterday I noticed a crocus coming out in the trail ... A poet is supposed to see it. If not, they should not be a poet." He said he's constantly "searching for endless meaning for the little things surrounding me."

News Clips Report

Choi compares himself to Robert Haas, the Pulitzer Prize-winning American poet.

"Certain things I can express in prose, certain things I can express in verse," Choi said, of his poetry. "Small things make life beautiful and sustaining."

In the poem, "America," which Choi wrote in 1968, he muses on baseball, Chevrolet and apple pie. "I tried to beautify and glorify the average man enjoying life, hamburgers, Coca Cola and sportscasts."

But today, that poem's taken on a more serious meaning. "Now I see some negative attack on these three symbols," he said. "GM is falling down, there's steroids in baseball and apple pie is making Americans fat with high levels of cholesterol."

Choi was the first Korean American poet to read his poems at the Library of Congress in 1994 and again in 2003. The late poet laureate and Pulitzer Prize winner Gwendolyn Brooks who died in 2001, was the consultant to the Library of Congress. "She invited me to read my poems to an American audience in the Library of Congress," Choi said. "She was the first person who discovered me, supported me and encouraged me."

Choi has also written about Korea-U.S. relations, environmental protection and conservation in many publications, including the New York Times, the Washington Post and the Washington Times.

In May, Choi will read his poem "The Immigrant's Dream" during the Naturalization Ceremony at the Fairfax County Government Center.

Choi is a Presbyterian but some think he's a Buddhist, and out of 85 poems, five or six display his religiousness. "Sometimes if you try to reveal your religious life, the poetry quality goes down," he said. "I am very cautious whenever my religious view in life comes into my poetry."

He is now searching for a publisher for his book of prose, "Song of Myself, A Korean American Story."

Rockville Science Center Supporters Move Forward With Project Washington Post - Online

Organizers of the Rockville Science Center project have no money, no site to build on and no firm commitments of support, but they say they have a renewed focus on making the dream of a place that promotes the sciences come true.

Since the first of the year, the trustees and volunteers, who recently sought nonprofit status for their project, have reenergized their efforts with monthly Science Cafes. 'At the moment, we're ready and hoping not only to draw upon people who would like to be involved, but we want to build a cadre of individuals who are willing to put the sweat equity into the program and help us make it happen,' said Rockville City Council member Phyllis R. Marcuccio, who serves on the science center's organizing committee.

The idea for a facility that would feature exhibits and hands-on activities began with the Rockville Consortium for Science, a group of residents whose goals include educating people in the sciences. The consortium holds the popular Rockville Science Day each spring that draws several hundred visitors. 'The concept of Science Day is what the Rockville Science Center would be like if we had one,' said Robert Ekman, the consortium's president.

This year, Science Day will be April 26 at Montgomery College's Rockville campus.

The group completed a feasibility study in 2006. Members of the group, including then-Mayor Larry Giammo and Marcuccio, visited with businesses and the scientific community to see where they might find support.

The next step toward creating the Rockville Science Center is raising funds.

According to the feasibility study, building the center could cost as much as $7 million, compared with $1.5 million to renovate an existing space. The city financed the $59,300 study but said that private funding must be found to build the center.

Once the center is established, 'then our goal will shift to supporting a science center,' Ekman said. The Maryland Science Center in Baltimore has given the group its tacit support. 'They have told us, 'You are primed down there in Montgomery County for a science center,' ' Marcuccio said. The second Rockville Science Cafe, held last week, featured a discussion on evolution that drew 60 to 75 people, including 'hard-core academics,' parents with children, teachers and retirees, organizers said. The discussion was led by Robert 'Mac' West, co-author of the feasibility study completed through his company, Informal Learning Experiences. 'We definitely have an audience,' Marcuccio said. 'There's no question about it.' Having a science center in Rockville would complement the abundance of highly educated and science-savvy residents, science-related organizations and the county school system, West said. 'We intend to be not just Rockville's science center, but of course Montgomery County's,' Ekman said.

Stevenson U. Opens Doors to Montgomery Nursing Students Nurse.com

Stevenson (Md.) University and Montgomery College, which has three Maryland campuses, have signed an agreement that will ease the transition for nursing students seeking BSN degrees.

'We look forward to adding Montgomery College to our community college partners,' said Judith Feustle, RN, ScD, associate dean for nursing education at Stevenson, in a news release. 'This articulation (agreement) makes it more convenient for students to continue their education and pursue a bachelor's degree in nursing.'

Thanks to the agreement, Montgomery nursing students can transfer up to 70 general education credits toward the 120 credit hours required for a Stevenson degree. Stevenson also will award 30 upper-division credits for students with an active RN license.

Montgomery is the eighth community college in the state to have an articulation agreement with Stevenson's nursing division.

Stevenson also will offer some RN-to-BS classes at Montgomery to help working nurses have easier access to a bachelor's degree.

On Sunday, March 1 County Executive Isiah Leggett was involved in a car crash in Burtonsville, Md. when the vehicle in which he was riding was struck by another vehicle. Injuries to all four individuals including Leggett were minor.

At approximately 10:20 p.m., police officers from Montgomery Countys 3rd District and Howard County Fire/Rescue personnel responded to the report of a traffic collision on Sandy Spring Road near the off-ramp at Columbia Pike. For reasons still under investigation, the Jetta left the roadway and struck an electrical utility pole which caused the pole to break in two pieces. The vehicle continued off the roadway, striking a tree before coming to rest.

The passenger of the vehicle has been identified as Dale Michael Carnahan, 18, of the 17300 block of Soper Street in Poolesville. He was flown to Baltimore Shock Trauma and is in grave condition. Board approves plan for Montgomery College garage The Gazette Papers

Board approves plan for Montgomery College garage
Takoma Park residents still concerned about expansion
by Jason Tomassini | Staff Writer

Montgomery College received final approval Thursday to continue its expansion into South Silver Spring with a new parking garage, but residents are concerned with the college's future expansion plans and its effect on nearby historic properties.

Preliminary construction has already begun at the site on Jesup Blair Drive in Silver Spring and the $15 million garage is expected to be completed by the end of the year, said David Capp, associate vice president for college facilities. The six-floor garage will have 372 spaces for college students and staff and 10 metered spaces for users of Jesup Blair Park across the street.

The Montgomery County Planning Board approved a mandatory referral for the garage Thursday and a forest conservation plan that includes a fence to guide pedestrians away from trees and soil in the heavily traveled Jesup Blair Park.

The board was skeptical the 4-foot-tall fence would deter college students from walking in the park.

"One of the reasons we have parks is to have people in them," said board chairman Royce Hanson. "I am flummoxed by the idea of keeping people out of parks."

Eventually the conservation plan was approved with the fence included, but efforts to make it more effective would be necessary, the board said.

Takoma Park residents who testified Thursday were not opposed to the garage or the conservation plan, but reiterated long-held concerns that the college plans to expand too close to nearby historic homes, rather than westward, as previous expansion plans indicated.

The current draft master plan for the college includes demolishing and rebuilding two science buildings along Fenton Street, as well as the college's learning resource center on New York Avenue across from historic houses between Chicago and Takoma avenues, commonly referred to as Block 69, Capp said. The college also recently opened the Cafritz Foundation Arts Center next to the garage site and is currently renovating the Commons Building on Takoma Avenue into general purpose classrooms.

Residents said the college would better serve the community by developing a site on Burlington Avenue that is owned by the college's foundation and sits across the CSX tracks near the campus.

The college is currently working on an updated facilities master plan outlining the college's plans for 2006 to 2016, Capp said.

Residents and City Councilman Josh Wright, whose Ward 1 includes the campus and surrounding neighborhoods, urged a more comprehensive approach to the expansion, with the board approving a master plan before any future development projects.

"What you are being asked to do is look at land use in absence of the overall context that is ultimately intended," said Jim Evans, who lives at 703 New York Ave. near the campus.

The board members would like to review the master plan but said they had no jurisdiction over any plans for the college besides what is brought before them.

"You want us to hold up the garage based on stipulations that have nothing to do with the issues before us," board Vice Chairman John Robinson said to the residents. "... The best I can do is look at the college and say... 'It would be easier to come in with a revised facility plan in advance of future construction.'"

Council seeks more involvement in hospital move process
Council Notes | Jeremy Arias

In an ongoing attempt to maximize the services left by the Washington Adventist Hospital following its anticipated move in 2013, the City Council discussed strategies Monday with the City Attorney to ensure the highest level of responsiveness by the hospital to the city's ongoing health care needs.

Eileen Sobeck of the city-appointed hospital land-use committee recommended that the city only support the hospital in its relocation if Washington Adventist enters into a binding agreement with the city which would allow the council to have more of a say about what services will be left in Takoma Park after the move.

"The committee was concerned given some of the past relationships between the city and the hospital that the city delivers what its obligations are up front [in agreements] and then the enforceability of WAH's obligations are problematic," Sobeck said.

City Attorney Susan Silber mentioned several steps the council could take that would help them get a binding agreement with the hospital, including becoming a participating entity or a party of interest in the hospital's Certificate of Need application to the Maryland Health Care Commission.

The hospital has to prove that a facility in the Calverton/White Oak area would fulfill a specific need in the community. By becoming a part of this process and gaining the ability to testify before the commission, the city might find itself in a better position to enforce promises made by the hospital in an MOA, according to Silber.

Silber urged the council not to take the hospital's proposed plans for the Village of Health and Well-Being for granted. Mayor Bruce Williams agreed, likening the problem of holding the hospital accountable to other similar "unofficial agreements" made with entities in the city.

"I can see it being the smoking gun that everybody is always looking for in the Metro discussion, the Montgomery College discussion, everybody's always going, 'All this ... was talked about so much that there has to be some [enforceable] agreement' and nobody ever found it," he said. "I look on this as our attempting to come up with that document."

The council's top priorities for the hospital site is a 24-hour urgent care facility.

Rockville Science Center effort gathers momentum
Rockville facility would host exhibits, hands-on lessons
by Contessa Crisostomo | Staff Writer

Organizers of the Rockville Science Center project have no money, no site to build on and no firm commitments of support, but say they have a renewed focus on making the dream of a place that promotes the sciences come true.

The boards of trustees and volunteers, who recently applied for nonprofit status, have re-energized their efforts since the first of the year with monthly Science Cafés.

"At the moment, we're ready and hoping not only to draw upon people who would like to be involved, but we want to build a cadre of individuals who are willing to put the sweat equity into the program and help us make it happen," said Rockville City Councilwoman Phyllis R. Marcuccio, who also serves on the center's organizing committee.

The idea for a facility that would feature exhibits and hands-on activities began with the Rockville Consortium for Science, a group of residents whose goals include educating people on the sciences. The consortium holds the popular Rockville Science Day each spring that draws several hundred visitors.

"The concept of Science Day is what the Rockville Science Center would be like if we had one," said Robert Ekman, president of the consortium.

This year Science Day will be held April 26 at Montgomery College's Rockville campus.

The group completed a feasibility study in 2006, and members of the group, including then-mayor Larry Giammo and Marcuccio, visited with businesses and the scientific community to see where they might find support.

The next step toward the goal of creating the Rockville Science Center is raising funds.

According to the feasibility study, building the center could cost up to $7 million, compared with $1.5 million to renovate an existing space. The City of Rockville funded the $59,300 study, but has said private funding must be found to pay for building the center.

Once the center is established, "then our goal will shift to supporting a science center," Ekman said.

The Maryland Science Center in Baltimore has given the group its tacit support.

"They have told us, 'You are primed down there in Montgomery County for a science center,'" Marcuccio said.

The second Rockville Science Café on Feb. 24, featuring a discussion on evolution by Robert "Mac" West, the co-author of a feasibility study completed through his company, Informal Learning Experiences Inc., drew 60 to 75 people, including "hard-core academics," parents with children, teachers and retirees, organizers said.

"We definitely have an audience, there's no question about it," Marcuccio said.

Having a science center in Rockville would complement the abundance of highly educated and science-savvy residents, science-related organizations and "excellent" school system in Montgomery County, West said.

"We intend to be not just Rockville's science center, but of course Montgomery County," Ekman said.

More News gal photos (gal 2) gal photos (gal 2) gal photos (gal 2) gal photos (gal 2) It has been 40 years since the British rock group The Who unleashed songs from their album "Tommy" on a writhing mass of fans at Woodstock. Roberta Gasbarre, who is directing the College Performing Arts Series production of "The Who's 'Tommy,'" thinks that's long enough for something that started as a popular revolution to morph into art. "It depends on your definition of art," says Gasbarre, an adjunct professor at College who is director of the Smithsonian Institute's Discovery Theater and a longtime arts advocate in County. "If you look at the Impressionists, the Cubists, Salvador Dali even Mozart those art forms were rebellion against the status quo. "Mozart was crazy! He was the rock star of his generation." But her generation Gasbarre is 57 venerated rockers like The Who, and found meaning in what the four working class musicians from England Pete Townsend, Roger Daltrey, John Entwistle and the late Keith Moon represented. "The music spoke to us back then about what we saw as our parents' stagnation," she says. "We wanted to break out of the narrow existence they were living, go against the establishment. And music, rock and roll music, was a form of rebellion." It's a rebellion each generation has a tendency to revisit as its members come of age, and to that end, Gasbarre has assembled a cast of College students, an "all star production team" and a seven-piece rock band that perches right on the Parilla Center stage for "The Who's 'Tommy.'" The show about the spiritual awakening of a "deaf, dumb and blind kid" whose life is transformed by the power of music is the musical Who guitarist Townsend and Des MacAnuff created in 1993. (It is based on the 1969 album, not the 1975 film, which was poorly received and tends to be dismissed by most Who fans.) In it, Tommy, the protagonist, stands for society: blinded, restrained from self-expression and expected to go along with the crimes and immoralities of the reigning generation. His redemption is the triumph of the individual against the machine that is society, the victory of rock and roll over the mundane. "It's that scream of rejection of the old formula, that idea that my pain is louder than Ella Fitzgerald or Lawrence Welk," says Gasbarre. "My pain can best be expressed through rock and roll." She considers Townsend "somewhat of a rock and roll prophet," and categorizes "Tommy" as a portrait of the rock and roll trajectory. But it's also a great metaphor for coming of age, perfect for the students, ages 16 to 25, Gasbarre is working with. "I love the student body at College," says Gasbarre. "It cuts across a wide cross-section of society, and there's great socioeconomic and ethnic diversity." The Theatre Arts students with whom she works most closely "all have a passion for the arts, which I love." Many of the students Gasbarre knows are living with realities similar to what members of The Who and other '60s-era bands rebelled against back in the day. "Kids these days are living the same reality," she says. "The beginning of the 21st century is a time of terrible hardship. These are not kids who are given everything by their they're working alongside their parents, and they're keenly aware of the economic downturn." Gasbarre says she lost several potential cast members to the time constraints of work and study obligations. And she thinks that the Woodstock generation will be moved by "The Who's 'Tommy,'" not just because of nostalgia, but because of the new meaning it's taken on. "I went into this remembering the '60s, but I've come to see that things are the same now," she observes. "These 21st century young people understand the power of song, dance, rock and roll and theater to transform their lives into something to celebrate." Listening to their mp3 players, plugged in to their social networking sites, Gasbarre says today's "kids" have the tools to create a culture of their own, just as her generation did. "Back then, we said 'Don't trust anyone over 30' and 'Young people can change the world,'" she says. "But if you look at the election, well, young people changed the world!" Armed with that victory, the arts students performing in "The Who's 'Tommy'" take on the play with an enthusiasm Gasbarre finds inspiring. "Their energy is amazing," she says. "It's a small company, and I'm asking each member to take on two, three or even four roles. "They're all every single one of them has to carry a number." Facilitating that are musical director Chris Youstra and choreographer Raquis Da'Juan Petree, plus the professional musicians in the band. Gasbarre categorizes "The Who's 'Tommy'" as "a rock and roll show that has this theatrical core embedded in it." And when her students ask if rock and roll can really change the world, Gasbarre says she's living proof that it can. "I really believe in theater and I want the rock and roll legacy to go on," she says. "I'm changing the world, one amazing young performer at a time. "That, for me, is well worth it." The county is currently looking at raising the residential tax rate from $1.14 to $1.29 per $100 assessed value to offset some funding cuts. One of Rockville's own will strut her stuff on-screen tonight as she competes against 11 other aspiring models on the premiere of the new season of the reality TV show 'America's Next Top Model.' Sandra Nyanchoka, a 19-year-old Montgomery College student, moved to Rockville from Kenya seven years ago with her parents and six siblings, she said in an interview on The CW Network's Web site. 'I feel like [the show] is a great opportunity for me,' Nyanchoka said in the video interview. 'It's something I've always wanted to do. It's a chance to gain experience, meet great people and better myself as a model.' Attempts to get an interview with Nyanchoka were unsuccessful, as she is unable to discuss the outcome of the show. 'America's Next Top Model' was created and is hosted by Tyra Banks, a model well-known for her work for Victoria's Secret and Sports Illustrated. She also hosts her own talk show, aptly-named 'The Tyra Banks Show.' 'America's Next Top Model,' which first aired in 2003, is in its 12th cycle. The show documents a competition among a dozen young women vying for a contract with CoverGirl cosmetics and the opportunity to be managed by a top modeling agency.

The two-hour premiere will begin at 8 p.m. on Comcast channel 23 and Verizon FiOS channel 514.

Montgomery College's decision to close a gap in its fence leading to a neighborhood where student and faculty smokers congregate will heap more inconvenience on a group that already feels unfairly treated by the college.

'It's an injustice,' said Christen Shank, a 22-year-old student and smoker. 'Smokers have rights, too.'

The college will soon close the fence after residents of Princeton Place and the surrounding neighborhood complained of loitering, littering and mischief by smokers congregating on the cul-de-sac after they were forced off school property when the college instituted a tobacco-free policy on its campuses last August.

After entreaties by Rockville's mayor and council for the college to find a solution, the Rockville Planning Commission in February gave the college permission to close the fence. But that permission came with the stipulation that the college work with nearby residents to find a long-term solution.

Dr. Judy E. Ackerman, vice president and provost of the Rockville campus, said the fence is not closed yet, but 'will go up soon.'

'To alleviate the impact of students who loiter, litter and smoke in the Princeton Place community, Montgomery College is putting up a fence. We will work with city staff to explore options to address the interests of other groups who are impacted by the fence,' she said.

David J. Capp, associate vice president of facilities, said a 6-foot-tall chain-link fence with no gate or opening will be installed.

Shank, an art education major from Derwood, and two of her friends sat on the sidewalk at Princeton Place on a warm day last week. They said they would not feel so relaxed sitting on the sidewalk on Mannakee Street or Rockville Pike, their other options for smoking.

'I'm not even going to go off campus anymore,' Shank said. 'I'm doing them the courtesy of coming out here as it is.'

And Shank isn't the only one who feels this way, she said. Some smokers, both students and faculty, sometimes congregate on the college side of the fence, which is a violation of the tobacco-free policy, she said. Others stand under low-hanging trees near the campus property line, but still on campus.

'We are continuing to work on increasing compliance with the college's tobacco-free policy. Students who smoke on college property are in violation of the Student Code of Conduct,' Ackerman said. 'Reported violations are handled like any other violations of the Student Code of Conduct, through the Dean of Student Development.'

Shank questioned the purpose and effectiveness of the policy.

'We're still going to smoke,' she said. 'Not everyone on campus will quit smoking because of this.'

None of the three have heard about anyone giving up smoking because of the policy.

'I haven't heard of one person,' said Sarah McKay, a 20-year-old art education major from Gaithersburg.

Shank, who has two jobs and a 3-year-old child in addition to her school work, said having to walk off campus to smoke is a frustration she wishes she didn't have to deal with.

'We're in a corner, just leave us alone,' she said.

Critics of Congressional earmarks harshly attacked President Obama and members of his administration Monday, accusing the White House of ignoring the president's campaign promise to end the use of lawmaker-directed projects as a way of allocating precious federal funds. But it's unlikely that many of those complaints will be coming from colleges, which stand to benefit -- to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars -- from the pork barrel-laden fiscal 2009 spending bill that is prompting the outcry.

The arguments for and against earmarked spending -- federal monies that individual members of Congress specifically direct to entities of their choosing, usually constituents from their districts or states that have lobbied for the funds -- are by now well worn. They're regularly derided by critics as fostering the waste of tax dollars and encouraging a sometimes secretive circumvention of the traditional peer review processes, which often results in failure to produce the best science. Supporters argue that the earmarks level the playing field for less-prestigious institutions that are too often shut out of the sometimes clubby executive branch grant making processes.

President Bush regularly railed against earmarks, especially late in his time in office, and they gained a high profile in the 2008 presidential campaign, with the Republican candidate, Sen. John McCain, putting them virtually at the center of his domestic policy, to the point that he was sometimes ridiculed for talking about little else. President Obama, not to be left out, himself vowed to crack down on earmarks.

But the omnibus spending bill for the 2009 fiscal year that Congressional Democrats released last month, having deferred action from last year because they wanted to avoid a fight with the lame duck Bush administration over spending priorities and earmarks, is filled with what critics estimate to be 9,000 earmarks designated by members of Congress.

Administration officials said that the Obama would sign the legislation despite the earmarks, with the White House budget director, Peter Orszag, explaining on the Sunday morning political talk shows that the administration considered the 2009 budget to be 'last year's business' and that the president, while remaining opposed to earmarks, wanted to 'just move on.'

That brought angry denunciations from McCain and others on the Senate floor Monday as Congress's senior chamber debated the omnibus spending measure. 'What, so throw open the barn door and let this omnibus be filled with 9,000 earmarks and you will just look the other way, despite your pledges in opposition to earmarks? What happened to his pledge last September, when President Obama said during the debate in Oxford, Miss., 'We need earmark reform, and when I'm president, I will go line by line to make sure that we are not spending money unwisely'?' (McCain proposed scrapping the omnibus bill and instead extending, for the rest of the 2009 fiscal year, the continuing resolution that is set to expire Friday.)

The White House spokesman, Robert Gibbs, was pressed further at a briefing for reporters Monday, where one noted that the president's closest associates were responsible for some of the earmarks.

'It has been learned,' one reporter said, 'that Vice President Biden has, I think its $750,000 for the University of Delaware satellite station, and Rahm Emanuel $900,000 for the Chicago Planetarium. Since the president talked so much about earmarks in the campaign and as president about keeping them out of the stimulus -- I know this is left-over business from last year, but its something that he is either going to sign or veto. Why not have, you know, the earmarks that come from his administration, essentially, at least taken out to send a signal, number one. And No. 2, is there any chance hell veto this bill and send it back and say, 'Get these earmarks out, theres over 9,000 of them' ?'

'What, so throw open the barn door and let this omnibus be filled with 9,000 earmarks and you will just look the other way, despite your pledges in opposition to earmarks?'

-- John McCain

Gibbs rebuffed that idea, but promised a crackdown going forward. 'I think whats most important and what the president would tell you is important here is that though he doesnt control everything that happened before he became president of the United States, that dozens and dozens and dozens of appropriations bills will go through Congress and come to his desk over the course of the next four years.'

Shhhh, Stop Complaining!

Calculating exactly how much earmarked money the omnibus legislation contains and who would receive it will take some doing, both because the spending bill and the accompanying reports that explain it are thousands of pages long, and because, despite new Congressional rules on transparency, the descriptions of the projects do not in every case seem to identify the recipient.

For instance, a list of energy efficiency and renewable energy projects in the portion of the spending bill for the Energy Department would deliver $380,600 for the 'Carbon Neutral Green Campus,' in Nevada. No college is noted, but an Office of Management and Budget database of earmarks attributes it to Nevada State College. Similarly, a $1,522,400 award for a 'geothermal power generation plant' in Oregon fails to note that the money would go to the Oregon Institute of Technology. And all of the many, many grants for research projects within the U.S. Department of Agriculture identify the projects by name -- 'Cranberry/Blueberry Disease and Breeding, N.J.' -- but not by recipient.

But judging just from the money that the bill makes clear would go to colleges and universities, they would benefit mightily from the omnibus legislation.

Research Spending

The section of the spending bill for Commerce, Justice, Science and Related Agencies includes at least $179 million in earmarks for colleges and universities, for instance. Institutions in Mississippi and Hawaii, which are represented by the senior Republican (Thad Cochran) and Democratic chairman (Daniel Inouye), respectively, of the Senate Appropriations Committee, would fare particularly well.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's budget would provide $2 million for the University of Hawaii's Hawaii Coral Reef Initiative, $700,000 for its Institute of Marine Biology, and $1,250 million for its Joint Institute for Marine and Atmospheric Research. The University of Mississippi would get $7,350 million for three different research projects.

The University of Mississippi's Medical Center would also get $6.5 million in an earmark from the National Institute of Standards and Technology's research construction fund, as would Mississippi State University. The big winner from NIST earmarks would be the University of Alabama: $30 million for an 'interdisciplinary science and engineering teaching and research corridor.'

The Health Resources and Services Administration, under the portion of the omnibus legislation for education, labor, and health and human services, contains hundreds of millions of dollars for health-care related facilities, including more than $100 million divided among scores of colleges and universities.

Among the would-be recipients: Iowa State University ($666,000) and Iowa Western Community College ($476,000) for facilities and equipment, Marshall University ($3.996 million for Translational Genomic Research Institute), the Nevada System of Higher Education ($951,000 for nursing and medical clinical skills labs), Montgomery College ($714,000 for biotechnology equipment), the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa ($9.515 million for construction and equipment), the University of Louisville ($8.563 million), and West Virginia University ($3.996 million for a multiple sclerosis center).

Also through the HRSA budget, Clark Atlanta University, which is facing serious financial turmoil, would receive $428 million for facilities and equipment.

More than 300 colleges would snag a piece of about $91 million in earmarked projects to be provided in the budget of the Education Department's Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education, and dozens more, mostly in partnerships with school districts and nonprofit groups, would get a piece of the $88 million allocated through the Fund for the Improvement of Education.

Impact Of New Media To Be Discussed WFMD-AM - Online

A discussion on how the new media will affect the future is scheduled for next week at Frederick Community College. The panel discussion is entitled 'Riding the Digital Wave: Newspapers, Television, Blogs, Social Networking and On Line Video.' It will be held at Kussmaul Theater on Thursday, March 12th from 7:00 to 8:30 PM.

One of the panelists will be Joe Osmann, a Professor of Digital Media Design at FCC. He says it will inform students pursuing a communication career of the skills they will need in the future. He says it will be more than just knowing how to write. 'Writing is the basis of all the communications fields, but now students are expected to come out and being able to shoot a video camera, and edit video, and put together stories...obviously, the writing and story skills are still needed,' says Osmann. Other panelists will be Ross Hodge, CEO of 3 Roads Communication; Harry St. Ours, Professor of Communications Arts Technology at Montgomery College; Michael Collins, editor of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association's magazine; and Kelly Trigger, Assistant Professor of English at FCC.

In a release, Osman says some of the discussion will also center around how the shift from print to on line media will affect the future. A news release quotes Osman as saying 'Newspapers, the gray ladies of information, are dying.' But in comments to WFMD News, Osmann says newspapers may survive, but they will need to adjust to stay in business. 'I don't think newspapers will disappear.....it's a double whammy with the decline of print media and the economy being so bad, that newspapers are going bankrupt at an alarming rate,' says Osmann. Last week, the Frederick News-Post announced that it will suspend its Monday edition beginning next month

On Stage A Bronx Tale Comes to D.C. On Tap

03/03/2009

As an academy-award nominated actor who has worked with Woody Allen and Robert De Niro, Chazz Palminteri has achieved great success. But the theater keeps calling him to share his shocking story with the world. As a young boy growing up in a tough neighborhood in the Bronx, he experienced a life-changing event that would serve as the catalyst for his story, 'A Bronx Tale,' a touching play he wrote and performs.

'This story is closely based on my life in the 1960s,' he said. 'The story is based on a killing I witnessed as I was on a stoop in my neighborhood. It started over a parking space.'

The lead characters name is Calogero, Palminteris real first name.

First performed by Palminteri in Los Angeles and off-Broadway in the 1980s, this is the first time 'A Bronx Tale' will be performed in Washington, D.C. after almost two decades on stage. While Palminteri was a struggling stage actor with a gripping play under his belt, he was not willing to sell it to just any movie producer. He even turned down a million dollar offer for the film rights even though he barely had enough to make his next rent payment. Enter actor/director/producer De Niro, who allowed Palminteri to pen the screenplay and star along with him in the 1993 hit of the same name. This movie catapulted Palminteri into super stardom after years of effort.

'I have wanted to be an actor since I was 10 years old,' said Palminteri.

Once a young Palminteri witnessed that murder, his life took a powerful turn after meeting the local mafia boss, Sonny. Palminteris father, Lorenzo, would stop at nothing to prevent him from being seduced into the mafia life.

'My father was a hard-working bus driver, and he would tell me not to be involved in violence and the mafia,' Palminteri said. 'He would say it was a waste of talent.'

'A Bronx Tale' is really about choices and making the right choice to follow what is good. Like his character in 'A Bronx Tale,' Palminteri made the right choice. He moved out of the Bronx when he was 18 and studied acting with Lee Strasburg.

Several years after the film adaptation, Palminteri revived his stage play last season on Broadway. Now, he is taking his show on the road with performances in Washington, Baltimore, Chicago and Boston.

Audiences are in for a real treat as Palminteri plays all 18 characters in the play. He adopts the voices, mannerisms and body movements of the characters without any bells and whistles.

'There are no props and no costume changes. This is a one-man show,' he said. 'It is still a very visual experience that mirrors the movie in many ways. This show is bigger and better and funnier than the movie.'

'A Bronx Tale' runs through March 8 at the Warner Theatre: 513 13th Street, NW, D.C.; 202-397-7328; www.warnertheatre.com.

ALSO ON STAGE

There are two great shows at Arena Stage in D.C. and Virginia. In Edward Albees 'A Delicate Balance,' Agnes and Tobias are a retired married couple living with Agness alcoholic sister. When more dysfunctional family members move into their secluded suburban paradise, the lives of Agnes and Tobias are upended. Albee was awarded the 1967 Pulitzer Prize for this play. 'A Delicate Balance' runs through March 15 at Arena Stage in Crystal City: 1800 S. Bell Street, Arlington, VA; 202-488-3300; www.arenastage.org. Tickets priced from $27.

'Crowns,' a spiritual and soulful musical celebrating the importance of family, friends and faith, is brought back to the stage at Arenas temporary D.C. theater. 'Crowns' examines the turbulent lives of six women whose hope and dreams are tested. 'Crowns runs from March 27 through April 26 at Lincoln Theatre: 1215 U Street, NW, D.C.; 202-488-3300; www.arenastage.org.

'Roundheads and Peakheads' by Bertolt Brecht takes place in the make-believe land of Yahoo. In Yahoo, the landowners run the government to the detriment of the tenant citizens who have had their fill of paying rent to the greedy landowners. In an effort to keep their power, the landowners plot a civil war between the Roundheads and the minority Peakheads. This study of how the rich will stop at nothing to retain power, even if it means plotting against the poor, remains relevant in today's populist environment. Roundheads, Peakheads and wealthy landowners are all eligible for the $10 ticket price at Catalyst Theater for all performances. 'Roundheads and Peakheads' runs through March 15 at Spenger Theatre: 1333 H St.NE, D.C.; 202-494-3776; www.catalysttheater.org.

Spanish playwright Lope de Vega examines the capricious nature of love with his classic story, 'The Dog in the Manger.' Vegas story features a fickle countess who rejects her suitors only to fall for her secretary who has fallen for one of her ladies in waiting. The countess will stop at nothing in order to pursue her secretary even if it means lying to her friends and fooling her suitors. 'The Dog in the Manger' runs through March 29 at the Lansburgh Theatre, Shakespeare Theatre, 450 7th Street, NW; 202-547-1122; www.shakespearetheatre.org.

'The Little Dog Laughed' at Signature Theatre is one of the best new plays currently on stage thanks to lively performances by Casie Platt and Holly Twyford. As a female Hollywood agent attempts to keep her cash cow movie star client in the closet, her movie star client and his male prostitute threaten the image from which she hopes to profit. With biting dialogue and humorous monologues, 'The Little Dog Laughed' takes a fresh look at the machinations of Hollywood. 'The Little Dog Laughed' runs through March 15 at Signature Theatre, 4200 Campbell Avenue, Arlington, VA; 703-820-9771;

'Pumpgirl' by Abbie Spallen is making its D.C. premiere courtesy of Solas Nua, the only arts organization dedicated exclusively to contemporary Irish arts. Madeleine Carr plays the title role. Stephanie Roswell and Solas Nua founding member, Dan Brick, round out this exceptional cast. While Pumpgirl works in a garage changing oil, she dreams of running away with a married stockcar racer whose marriage is running on empty. As the characters speak directly to the audience, theatergoers experience pure emotion from the actors of 'Pumpgirl.' Tickets for all performances of 'Pumpgirl' are only $20. 'Pumpgirl' runs through March 22 at Mead Theatre Lab at Flashpoint, 916 G Street, N.W.; 202-315-1305; www.solasnua.org.

Samuel Beckett's 'Krapps Last Tape' is presented by Keegan Theatre this month at Arlington's Theatre on the Run. 'Krapps Last Tape' is Samuel Beckett at his most creative. Beckett's one-act play consists only of a blind and deaf drunk man playing old tape recordings to himself. Theatre audiences will be challenged and excited by this one-man show. Tickets for all performances are $25 and students and seniors receive discounted tickets for $20 for all performances. 'Krapps Last Tape' runs through March 14 at Theatre on the Run, 3700 South Four Mile Run Drive, Arlington, VA; 703-892-0202;

February was an exciting time for the underground-ish theatres in town. Now it's March, and some of these shows got a jump on you, so you should definitely hurry out to catch these before they close.

Spooky Actions 'Heart of a Dog' by Mikhail Bulgakov -- This one's already open, but you've got the first week of March to see it. Kind of 'Communist Manifesto' meets 'Island of Dr. Moreau.' It was apparently banned in Russia for over 60 years and features Carter Jahncke, James Gagne, Joshua Drew, Janey Richards, D Grant Cloyd, Karen Novack and Joshua Singer. Runs through March 8. Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m., Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. Black Box Theatre at Montgomery College: 202-248-0647; www.spookyaction.org.

Also, check out Solas Nua's 'Pumpgirl,' by Abbie Spallen and directed by Linda Murray. This play by an emerging and stunning new Irish writer follows the collision course of a couple with the local girl working at the garage. Full of surprising revelations of innermost thoughts shared directly with the audience. Sure to make your skin tingle, or crawl, all in that deliciously theatrical way. Featuring Solas Nua company members Dan Brick, Madeleine Carr, and Stephanie Roswell. Show runs through March 22, Thursdays through Saturdays at 8pm, and Sundays at 3 p.m. $20. At Flashpoint's Mead Theatre Lab, 916 G Street NW, D.C. Buy tickets at door or at www.solasnua.org.

And while this isn't a very underground theatre, there is a very interesting show coming up at Woolly Mammoth Theatre Company. At the very end of March a new play opens called 'Antebellum,' by Robert O'Hara and directed by Chay Yew. It's a little bit of 'Gone With the Wind' with more racism, a Nazi threat, and a cabaret singer. Sure to be a huge hit. It runs

March 30 through April 26. Priced from $15. Wolly Mammoth: 641 D St., NW, D.C.; 202-289-2443; www.woollymammoth.net.

Lastly it would be silly for me not to mention that my theater company, Taffety Punk, is opening a new play called 'The Faithkiller' by local playwright Gwydion Suilebhan on March 30. Its a world premiere that upends conventional notions of American religion and media. 'The Faithkiller' tracks the revival of a bold story about a hero with a mind-changing weapon and the life-changing consequences it has on the creators, the audience, and the public at large. Opens March 30, at the Capitol Hill Arts Workshop (545 7th Street SE, D.C.) and runs April 1-18 Wednesday through Saturdays 7:30 pm with matinees on Saturdays at 2:00 pm. $10. Tickets available at www.taffetypunk.com.

MoCo Dance Show raises over $1,000

Friday's BNC fundraiser may be annual event

The MoCo Dance Show, a dance competition between crews from all over Montgomery County sponsored by Blair Network Communications (BNC), brought in over $1,000 Friday night in ticket and t-shirt sales, according to BNC's Public Relations Executive senior Hannah Nelson. The event was BNC's main fundraiser for the year.

Ajin Precision playfully danced its way to first place in the MOCO Dance Show.

Photo by Julia Seiger The show's net profit was $800 with the expenses for security, trophies and gifts for the judges. Tickets for the show cost $4 for students and $5 for adults if purchased beforehand; at the door students paid $6 and adults paid $8. Event t-shirts, $10 for audience members and $8 for dancers, were not successful fundraisers as only two were sold, according to BNC public relations associate junior Cristina Munoz-Pandya.

Recorded DVDs of the dance show costing $8 will provide post-show revenue for BNC. Students can pre-order these DVDs by visiting room 100; they will be delivered in about a month, according to Nelson.

An audience of over 200 people gathered in the Blair gym to watch the six dance groups perform; about a quarter of the attendees hailed from Einstein, supporting the Einstein Latin dance team, LASU, that ultimately placed second. Nelson attributed the event's large audience to the general relaxed nature of the dance show in comparison to other Blair events. "It's either formal dances or homecoming. This was more of a fun atmosphere where people could enjoy the dancers," she said.

Munoz-Pandya did not expect such high turnout. "We actually did get a big Blair audience. I was surprised."

Three teams received trophies at the end of the night: jabbawannabeez, made up of Blair's break-dancing cheerleaders, clinched third, LASU came in second and ajnin precision, with members from several schools including Poolesville, Magruder and Montgomery College, secured first place. Most teams' dance styles and music revealed hip hop influences, but there was still plenty of variation in the performances, according to Nelson.

Rather than change the form of BNC's fundraiser again next year, Nelson hopes to host another Moco Dance Show. "I think it would be great if we could have it every year," she said. "Then teams could defend their titles."

Montgomery residents dig out after snowstorm drops up to 6 inches Gazette, The

The most snow in recent memory fell in the Washington region overnight, leaving treacherous driving conditions as crews worked to remove the quickly accumulating powder.

The upcounty was hit the hardest, with Olney, Damascus and Laytonsville all getting six-inches of snow by midday, said Mark Hoekzema, chief meteorologist at WeatherBug in Germantown. Most downcounty areas had received 3-5 inches, he said this morning.

Montgomery County Public Schools and Montgomery College were closed. Ride On buses are operating on a weekday schedule with modified service. County police reported several crashes.

Montgomery County has experienced only a handful of power outages, according to a Pepco spokesman.

Clay Anderson said the highest number of reported outages in the county occurred between 8 and 9 a.m., when 25 to 30 customers reported outages. At 12:15 p.m., Anderson said that there were 11 outages in the county, all residential, with 'a couple' in Silver Spring and one in Potomac. Prince George's County, meanwhile, was dealing with several thousand outages.

In the Kingsview area of Germantown, residents spent the morning bundling up and digging their cars and driveways out. 'I love it,' said Judy Curtin, 47, who was shoveling snow with her 16-year-old daughter Danielle. 'I don't love this part of it, but I love the snow. It's beautiful.' The two had almost cleared the driveway by late morning. 'We'll get this done, and the snow plow will push it right back,' Curtin said with a laugh.

Many people said they didn't get supplies the night before, and that they were faring fine without the preparation. 'It was 4 to 6 inches, so nothing's going to help,' said Madan Mapuskar, 38, who had a business trip canceled because of the weather. 'I didn't think it would be so much,' he said after he finished clearing his walkway with daughter Ojal, 6. Others weren't as impressed by the relatively light snowfall compared to what forecasters had been predicting. 'I didn't think it was a big deal enough to shut everything down, but I guess it was,' Marc Tulloch, 41, said as he shoveled his driveway.

In preparation for Sunday night's storm, shoppers flocked to supermarkets, filling aisles and stocking up on essentials. Beth Tattar, the manager at the Giant on Old Georgetown Road in Bethesda, said she increased staff and opened more registers to accommodate the rush. 'I'm maybe getting a little bit more than usual, but not much,' said Alvin Marcos, of Bethesda, while loading up his car with groceries. 'People just need to be smart and not worry. It's just snow.' Hoekzema said it was the first storm in several years to hit the half-foot mark. 'I think the key is is that we've gone a couple winters without anything that's pushed 6-7 inches so I think people's short-term memory has taken over,' he said. The forecast for the rest of today and Tuesday called for some flurries, with wind chill temperatures reaching zero and 10 degrees below zero this afternoon and tonight, Hoekzema said.

The weekend could bring a taste of spring. 'We're right at the cusp and it does look like we're going to see the last of winter after the next couple cold days,' he said. 'The snow should all be a distant memory by the weekend.' Staff Writers Sebastian Montes, Meghan Tierney, Andrew Ujifusa, Bradford Pearson, Joe Beck and Contessa Crisostomo contributed to this report.

As the Spring Equinox Approaches, Saturn Hangs Out With Leo the Lion Washington Post - Online

As March breezes in, Saturn loiters with a lion all night and Venus is nothing like a lamb.

The brilliant beacon Venus remains easily visible in the southwestern sky at dusk. Early in the month, this planet will be negative fourth magnitude, or very bright. But as the month goes on, Venus makes an exciting exit. 'It will drop out of the sky. It will go from the most prominent object to -- basically -- not there anymore,' said Geoff Chester, of the U.S. Naval Observatory.

On March 27, Venus passes 'inferior conjunction,' an astronomical term that means when the planet will be between Earth and the sun, and this year it will be about eight degrees north of the sun. 'So Venus will be -- technically -- visible during dusk and dawn, and this type of event occurs every eight years,' he said. Chester said you will need good viewing conditions, such as a flat western and eastern horizon, to see Venus, just after sunset on March 27 and just before dawn on March 28.

Saturn starts the evening in the eastern sky, hanging out with the constellation Leo the Lion. Saturn is officially opposite the sun March 8 -- so when the sun sets, Saturn rises. This means the ringed planet (although the rings are nearly edge-on) can be viewed all night long. This large gassy planet appears at zero magnitude, bright enough to be seen from the city. Saturn is due south at midnight.

Just ahead of the sun, find Jupiter rising in the southeast. Early in the month, it is hard to find in the morning twilight, but by the end of March, early risers will be able to spot it easily. Jupiter, at negative second magnitude (very bright), begins to ascend the southeast horizon late in the month, starting at 5 a.m. This giant should be high enough to find at 6 a.m. However, the rising sun washes out the eastern sky soon after that.

Mars and Mercury, together now very low in the southeast below Jupiter, are hard to find for casual sky-gazers. Mars improves in the next few months.

In the heart of the constellation Cancer for the next several days, Comet Lulin has moved from the constellation Leo and is on course for Gemini, under the stars Castor and Pollux. To see this green, fuzzy cotton ball you will need binoculars, because it is dim beyond naked-eye visibility. Find this comet due south at 10 p.m. during the next several evenings.

On March 8, we turn our clocks ahead one hour at 2 a.m., according to the U.S. Naval Observatory. Thanks to the Energy Policy Act of 2005, we now spring forward on the second Sunday in March. We'll return to standard time in November.

Blooming happiness: Spring arrives. The vernal equinox, the exact moment when the sun appears to cross Earth's equator into the Northern Hemisphere, occurs on March 20 at 7:44 a.m. Eastern daylight time, according to the observatory. -- March 2 -- Planetarium director Jonathan Harmon will host the March edition of 'The Stars Tonight' at Arlington's David M.
